Country Girl."
For the past three years she has given the "Flying A" the best she has to devote to the art that she loves. Her personality is familiar to thousands who follow her eagerly in her countless plays. She is beautiful, winsone and refined—whether appearing in Western character or in society roles. Whatever she under-

Deput the beauthors and Division of the state of the sta Donald Buchanan, and Director Harry L. Solter, but in the part that is enacted by your favorite, Miss Florence Lawrence. Miss Lawrence, who has come to be known as the "Maude Adams of the Screen," has been seen in, perhaps, a larger variety of roles than any actress films today and it is somewhat of a difficult problem to give her something foreign to her repertory. But the Uni-versal is doing it. They are scouring the country for original, clever stories, aside from encouraging the company's best writers to turn out scripts for her. And, again, in this play, the Universal has found something new for her. Here we find Flo as the daughter of the superintendent of Uncle Sam's secret service. While her father and sweet-neart appraise her only as a girl, a child THE OLD SONGS heart appraise ner only a gard who knows nothing of political problems. Flo finds a mission, turns diplomat and prevents an affair that would bring about international complications. It is not going too far to say that this play is one of the best comedy-dramas in which the little actress has appeared for some time. Carlyle Blackwell's clean-cut interpretations of the roles he portrays in Kalem dramas has won for him tremendous popularity. In none of these, however, does he appear to such excellent advantage as in that of a minister. "The Award of Justice," a powerful two-part drama just completed by Kalem, shows Blackwell in the role of a young evangelist. According to the story, Horace, a minister, first thrashes and then reforms Tim Downs, a gangster. Later, he saves the lives of the man's children, thereby gain-lives of the mational interests.
